Ward 6 City Councillor
CHARLIE CLARK

Dear Holliston Residents:

Seasons greetings! Your spray park has finally been upgraded, and it was great to see how Holliston School embraced the Schools Plant a Legacy in Trees program this year to create some great improvements around the School and park. We will also be seeing some results in upcoming months from the Preston Avenue corridor study to make the street easier and safer to cross for pedestrians. We are making progress on back lanes which I know have been a real concern in Holliston, and there are also debates underway about how to deal with our crumbling roads and sidewalks, which I know is important to many people I have talked to.

City Council has also approved the next phase of a city-wide recycling program, and in February we will be receiving proposals from companies about how they could deliver a program to the City. Over the next several months I hope to see a more serious conversation about reducing our outward sprawl and building a more transit-friendly, compact, and liveable city, as this was also an overwhelming direction from citizens during the Saskatoon Speaks process.

With all of that in mind, I am going to use up the rest of my ink here talking about another issue that has been a growing concern in our community, particularly in these colder winter months: homelessness.

Homelessness has forever seemed to be one of those issues that everyone acknowledges is unacceptable and troubling, but that many people have felt pretty helpless to do anything about. In Saskatoon we learned recently that there are tangible steps a community can take to reduce homelessness and improve the lives of people living on the streets. In fact, right next door in Calgary they have managed to dramatically reduce homelessness in only three years by shifting their paradigm to a "housing first" approach.

Tim Richter of the Calgary Homeless Foundation (www.calgaryhomeless.com) visited Saskatoon in November to talk about how Calgary has gone from having Canada's fastest growing homeless population to being able to close down shelters by figuring out how to get and keep housing for people. The beauty of the story in Calgary is that they have been able to find dignified solutions for people, while reducing the police, ambulance, hospital, and incarceration costs associated with people living on the street. Dozens of other North American communities are also implementing plans to end homelessness with tremendous results.

In Saskatoon we are seeing a consensus developing that if Calgary can do it, so can we. The Saskatoon Health Region, the Police Services, the United Way, business leaders, church leaders, Mental Health and Addictions Services, and many of the service agencies working with homeless people are talking together about how to end homelessness in Saskatoon.

This type of initiative will require the support of people from all walks of life. I know homelessness touches many people in various ways. If you would like to learn more please let me know, and stay tuned for announcements in the coming year.

There is also a good five-minute video put out by the Alberta government on the success they have had there. You can find it at:

Best of the season to you and I hope you enjoy the winter,

- Charlie
